Cleburne Fire Department honored for Hurricane Harvey relief efforts

For eight weeks, first responders across Johnson County volunteered to spend tireless days away from their families to assist in areas affected by Hurricane Harvey.

Those firefighters and emergency personnel were honored on Oct. 22 during the Johnson County Emergency Services District No. 1 monthly meeting.

Harvey roared ashore the Texas coast Aug. 19 as a Category 4 hurricane, packing winds of 130 mph or more.

The resulting floods inundated thousands of homes, displaced more than 30,000 people and prompted more than 17,000 rescues — at least 88 fatalities have been confirmed, most of which were drownings.

Cleburne Fire Chief Clint Ishmael said he is proud of the service his crews provided.

"It's nice to be able to send Cleburne and Johnson County guys down to the coast when the state needs some help to show them what we are made of," he said. "Those guys were able to do some really good things for the folks down there and were spoken of highly so Johnson County and this area are going to be remembered for a long time down there."

Congressman Roger Williams also recognized the Cleburne Fire Department and other Johnson County Responders on the House Floor on Nov. 3.
